

Main Barriers

Finance

The primary barrier to market entry is financial. A minimum of $400,000 in investment is required to successfully launch a new Japanese fast food restaurant, penetrate the market and become a major player.

Specialization

The second barrier to entry is specialization. The supply of cooks familiar with Japanese cuisine is somewhat limited in the US.