

This month's script is a DHTML masterpeice, which uses layers and some neat ideas to design a single page which looks as if it actually has numerous pages and which shows the text in a small section of the screen.

There are up and down buttons, which you roll over and the text scrolls. The page has everything in basic text - you could just replace the dummy text with your own, or better still, add your own graphics and customise the text area, then integrate it into your page.