

et's Party Like It's 1999

The last year of the millenium is finally here, and all of us are lucky enough to experience it. If there's anything that you can be sure of, it's that this year will not be a boring one.

Apple Computer, Inc. has a whole lot to live up to after its great 1998 performance. With a new, mysterious product line waiting in the wings, I have a feeling that Apple will not disappoint. Put on your seat belts, folks. We are in for a crazy ride.

January's Website Pick: Moof! in Mind

<http://thor.he.net/~stories/moof.html>

recognize this
you know that I'm sure that most Apple Wizards readers little fellow from print dialog boxes. Did she's named Clarus (the dogcow) and that she's got an alert sound ("Moof!") dedicated to her, errr, it? Find out how everyone's favorite dogcow came to be by visiting this website.

New Signature To Spice Up Those E-mail Messages

his sig file reminds me of my office holiday party. Imagine the and setting: A room full of computer engineers, tech support staff, administrators all getting jolly together. That's right! Codeheads partying the night away! Well, I got into quite a humorous altercation with a very "jolly" techie about competing operating systems. Nobody got hurt, but you can be sure I told him where to put his "config.sys"!

I don't do .INI, .BAT, or .SYS files. I don't assign apps to files...
I don't configure peripherals or networks before using them...
I have a computer to do all that...
I Have a Mac

courtesy of Ian Stewart

hock Full of Holiday Spirit: Robert Z.'s Mac On Parade

Last month, I invited my loving readers to dress up their Macintosh for the holidays and send me a screenshot. Robert Z., robzim@writeme.com, took me up on the offer. He used a classic Garfield The Cat image from <http://www.garfield.com/> and the famous Macintosh shareware program, Holiday Lights by Tiger Tech. Holiday Lights, which can be found at <http://www.tigertech.com/hlights.html>, allows one to "string" Christmas and other holiday lights on your Macintosh desktop. As an added bonus, it can also play music. My favorite part of this screenshot is, of course, the open copy of last month's Apple Wizards.

start The Year With A Giggle!

Used by permission from:
<http://www.macworks.com/stuffthis/stuffthis.html>

Daria Aikens
daria@applewizards.net

<http://applewizards.net/>