

An image resides in a picture box which has a background fill using the special transparency color called "None". This can cause rasterized images which do not have clipping paths to be printed with jagged edges.