

Some images reside in picture boxes which have background fills using the special transparency color called "None". This can cause rasterized images which do not have clipping paths to be printed with jagged edges.